INFATUATION.

Missing thee ever, like will-o'-the-wisp, Still I have followed through light and through gloaming.

Knew I was near to thee,
Felt I was dear to thee,
Dreamed that you called and I said "I am coming,"
Dreamed I was held in your arms to be kissed; Followed thee, wistfully, year after year, Loved thee, and missed thee, and longed for thee, dear.

Must I resign thee, oh, king of my heart?
To find thee, and bind thee, never, oh, never,
To hold thee as lost to me,
Whate'er the cost to me,
Severed forever, vain every endeavor,
Always to know we are always apart;

To know that the space that divides from your Can never be traversed, whatever the pace. Blest to me, blest to me, over and over,

Blest to me, blest to me, over and over,
Was thy essence of presence near or afar;
Friend of my soul and closer than lover,
More than confessed to me
Thou wert a rest to me,
All that thou wert to me slow to discovery
Grand as a king and calm as a star;
Enthroused in my beart and set high in my sky.
Still loyal to thee I will live and will die.

Pity me, pity me, fruitlessly seeking, Tireless as hopeless and eager as vain; With soul that is faint and heart that is break ing.

Still I will cry to thee,
Strive to get nigh to thee,
List, as for life, for the sound of thy speaking. Hark to thy silence with exquisite pain.

And still, if then becken, my star and my king. Over the river that bounds thee foreve

Over the river that counds thee forever,
Through infinite grace thy soul I will trace;
Resisting, persisting, but faltering never,
Down many flights to thee,
Up hany heights to thee,
Rewarded at last my untiring endeavor,
I count it great joy if discerning thy face, And near or afar, wherever you are ou still are enthr
